JOSEPH SALADINO ANNOUNCES CAMPAIGN FOR CONGRESS

A Voice for New York's 11th Congressional District

STATEN ISLAND, NEW YORK, May 1, 2019 – Joseph “Joey” Saladino is proud to announce that he is running for Congress in New York's 11th Congressional District as a candidate in the Republican Party.

A Staten Island native, Joseph Saladino is particularly moved to action by the economic and social issues facing residents of NY-11. Joseph notes slowing economic opportunity for the area's youth, ever increasing taxes, and the growing opioid addiction crisis are among the great struggles we must face together. “I have been very fortunate to have found success as a social media content creator advocating for American values, and I want to give a voice to the people of my home in Congress and at the national level. I want to elevate the district's issues to national attention.” Says Saladino.

Joseph Saladino decided to run for Congress because he wants to be the voice for New York District 11. Working class and middle-class people of the District are suffering under growing taxes, economic disenfranchisement, and hostility from city and state governments. Joey is here to fight for working class issues, and he will be able to carry the District's voice into Congress by unseating Max Rose.

Max Rose promised much and delivered little in his time in Congress other than to support the Congressional Democrats' radical agenda of disenfranchisement of the working and middle classes who are the backbone of our community. Combined with his unwillingness to address the bigotry in his party by some of its members, New York's 11th Congressional District needs new leadership.

Joseph Saladino wants to apply his working class, New York City values to work in Congress and use his voice, a reach of over 10 million followers and 1 billion views per year on social media, to work for New York District 11. He will stand up for the American values that built New York and the people who live in the district and be their voice in 2020 and beyond.
